Pesticide Progress

MOST British Columbians will be gratified to learn that a special committee set up by the provincial government is working actively though quietly on the problems of distribution and use of poisonous pesticides, and has in view steps toward legislative action to provide more adequate and effective controls where the need may be indicated.

That the existing regulations leave much to be desired is obvious, and this is—and ought to be—a matter of growing popular concern. It is a strange facet of the situation that an eastern educator, the head of the University of Western Ontario zoology department, says that controversy over the pesticides should not be placed before the public, because doing so produces an emotional judgment which makes balance difficult to achieve. He refers presumably to balance between the beneficial and harmful effects of the chemicals; insecticides, he says, have had a "bad press," but have protected many millions of persons from malaria for instance.

How the learned gentleman would keep the public from knowing about the conflict of interests and ideas in a society such as we have in Canada is one of life's little mysteries: both the good and bad of the weed and insect killers have been monumentally documented and discussed, and will continue to be. Of course in this as in every other matter of widespread importance there will be exaggerations and misleading claims and counter-claims-on both sides of the question.

But the people in general have more sense than the professor seems ready to credit them with. The public consensus undoubtedly would be not an unreasoning antagonism toward all the pesticides, but a strong desire for more comprehensive research and for more stringent controls to be applied where demonstrably needed as soon as possible. It is pleasing that our own province is moving in this direction, and is not content to leave the matter entirely up to Ottawa.

Worth Not Saying

AS WAS widely anticipated Victoria MP David Gross as a former naval capatain has seen fit to add his words to the many already uttered by numerous retired military officers on the present state of Canada's armed forces before the Commons defence committee in Ottawa.

Joining the ranks of experts parading before the committee Captain Groos reported that Canada's armed forces aren't strong enough to defend this

And what he mys is undeniably true. Canada's combined navy, army and air force today cannot fight off a determined invader. But this is not unique to this time or place. Never in its past 100 years of history has Canada been able to defend itself, nor for that matter has any other country.

The vast might of the Russian army could not defend the Russian borders in the last war, the overpowering strength of the German army could not prevent the invasion of Europe by the Allies, and Britain could not have prevented the violation of her shores had the Nazis made a supreme effort in 1940

Today no nation-including the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.—can defend itself, regardless of the size of its armed forces and the modernity of its equipment. In these days of intercontinental ba territory can be considered secure.

Captain Groos knows this, the public knows it and it is to be hoped that the defence committee knows it. In fact, the observation could well have remained

Health Checks

THE MEDICAL director of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada seems amazed that people are not more diligent about having regular examinations by their physicians to safeguard their general health. Placing some of the blame on doctors for not stressing the need-he cites the dental profession as having done a much better job in this regard—he says that Canadians are more concerned about having their cars checked over periodically than having themselves inspected on the same basis.

Not entirely facetiously it could be suggested that one can leave the car at the garage or service station on the way to work or while shopping, but a human body isn't so conveniently detachable. And most of us don't like sitting in a doctor's waiting room unless driven there by a symptom too painful or worrisome to be shrugged off. Dentists generally seem to overcome this reluctance more successfully than physicians by being quite definite about new appointments-"Put Mr. Blob down to have another look at these teeth next April, Miss Jones," they usually say, and Miss Jones assigns a time and date.

But more of a deterrent perhaps is that medical Insurance plans like MSA do not provide for payment for general, preventive checkups. Thus, despite the emphasis that some health authorities and societies concerned with alleviating the ravages of certain diseases continually place on the importance of regular examinations, and despite the beneficial peace of mind that most people would derive, the impression is given that this service is something of a frill.

How many subscribers to medical insurance, one wonders, would object to paying a few more dollars annually in premiums if one all-round checkup a year were included in the benefits?

Reading Speed

When we are reading, only one or two letters are seen clearly at one time The eyes move across the page in a series of jerks, hopping from one group of letters to the next and not in one long sweep across the line as might be expected. It is only by practice that we learn to read rapidly. By experience we are able to recognize a long word by looking directly at only a few parts of it. However, a person just learning to read new words or a new language must study each letter in turn and the reading is slow. Through practice, we group a number of letters or words together and are able to recognize the group at one giance.

The average person reads only 250 words a minute but this can be more than doubled through training.

It is also advisable to have your eyes examined at least every two years.

Drug Plan Gets Reprieve

TORONTO (CP) — Sponsors of a pilot program of community insurance for prescription this year in Owen Sound, Ont. have announced that the pro-gram will run for at least another year to give the plan a fair trial.

Benefits paid out during the first year have been running ahead of total premiums received and the plan will attempt to enrol additional members for the second year.

The Blue Cross program sponsored by the Ontario Hospital Association, is open to any resident of Owen Sound,

The plan pays the cont of prescriptions in excess of $25 a person a year in return for premiums of $8 a year for an individual subscriber and $18 a year for a family.

The spokesman said the initial failure of premiums to cover the cost of benefits was expected because the first to subscribe included people who knew their annual drug bill would be

LONDON (TNS) - Canada is pulling itself out of its slump in immigration from the United Kingdom and this year may pass the 25,000 mark, a Canadian official told me here.

If the current trend continues "we may see a big year in 1964," said H. L. Volsey, director of the Canadian Government Immigration Service for the United Kingdom. Last year's total U.K. immigration to Canada rose to 16,500 from the 1961 figure of 13,500. Britons in Canada are signalling their countrymen by

A PARADOX

I find it, also, a paradox. For an unremitting saga of animal appetites in a decadent 18th century society, as gamy as it is lusty, it alternately stimulated and wearied me for its more than two hours of gambols on and off the green.

It is so determinedly, so presociously artistic that it nagged at me incessantly to find fault with it. And I did-mainly because of its two styles, which seemed to me incompatible.

On the one hand, Tom Jones re-creates its period magnificentiv. It is all the best and the worst of British humor, from Chaucer to Coward with excursions that suggest Shakespeare, Chaplin, Hogarth, Oliver Twist, Threepenny Opera, Jules et Jim and what-have-you. On the other hand, Richardson and his associates have superimposed on it just about every trick of the trade since the flickers began-silent technique. complete with subtitles; images eded up by under-cranking; stop motion; spoken asides to the audiences, and everything from hand-held cameras to helicopters. AMOROUS ADVENTURES

Tom Jones is born out of wed lock and stays out of it through a succession of amorous adventures with one beauteous damsel after another until the final reel, in which he is preugen at the riage to his orie, perhaps, true love. She is Sophie, childho sweetheart and daughter of terrible-tempered Squire Wester from a neighboring manor.

In between, a young Quinote flailing at windmills, he has been to London town from Somerset, encountering all sorts of brawling and bawling inhabitants along the way.

Tom Jones wallows in the loweut instincts of its people-in stincts that are hysterically emotional and unfailingly gross and brutalizing when they are not simply carnal.

Tom is portrayed with an irresistible joy of living by Albert

Studebaker Sees Sharp Sales Gain

HAMILTON — Studebaker of Canada Ltd. expects to sell well over 10,000 Canadian-built cars this model year compared with about 7,700 in the 1963 model year, G. E. Grundy, president, told Canadian Dow Jones.

"Everything clicked this year and we're off to a good start," he said.

To handle this year's higher sales it may be necessary to double the work schedule to 16 hours from the present eight. Grundy said. Plans to expand the Hamilton plant have been deferred for the have been deferred for the time, probably next year, when a decision is made on prod uction of Studebaker trucks in Canada.

Grundy said Studebaker of Canada plans to produce "certain specialized lower-priced vehicles" for export which, because of small production runs, couldn't be handled economically by Studebaker in the U.S.

It was one of those Japanese balls and Hazel and Barney had a find to add to their collection of beachcombed objects. That was Friday when a raging storm thrashed the Sookerdon Beach-Turwell Creek-Jordan River-China

It was the fourth glass ball the Baker's have found along Tuewell-Gordon Beach waterfront in five years. Their collection includes many other kinds of fishing floats, odd-shaped bottles, and fascinating driftwood, but the glass balls which float from Japan in the Japanese currents are the big prizes.

This is the best time of year for beachcombing, although walking along a storm-washed and cluttered beach is pretty difficult at high tide.

Gardeners will find piles and piles of kelp for use as fertilizer. Practically all of the non-sheltered kelp beds have been ripped out by storms.

We arrived Friday to find our ramp torn out, but still in good position to salvage the poles and planks. Our pit in which we had spent many pleasurable hours in the spring, sheltered from the winds, had been filled in with boulders

Other beachside dwellers, like Jumbo Davies, had been eaught too. All of us knew it was time to batten up, but cohe fishing was good and each weekend was to be the last before haul-up time.

a share in the community. Although this concept of wnership is familiar to apartment dwellers it is new in the walm of community planning. It is this aspect which designer Byron Price is emphasizing in the development of University Village. He said "by offering this condominium concept of ownership to the residents of University Village it is our hope to introduce a vitality in the community that might other wise remain a group of iso-lated dwellings."

At University Village residents will own a share in the community through the country club or recreational centre and swimming pools.

This same principle applie to owners of semi-det houses, as well as single family dwellings.

In the case of the semi-de tached home or duplex each owner has title to his half of the house and property and is also part owner in the community centre. Emphasizing the fact that University Village is to be di versified, town houses or small apartment buildings are planned for the area. They will not only size a planned to the planned give physical diversification to community but they will attract a more migrant residen creating a stratified society.

Town houses will mean that residents can enjoy all the amenities of living in a resi dential area while at the same time gaining the advantages of apartment living.

Only Canadian Sub In for Full Refit

Canada's only submarine, the Esquimalt-based HMCS Grilse, is at HMC Dooltyard for the first full submarine refit ever undertaken in Canada.

The Grilse is on loan from the U.S. Navy and has been engaged in exercises with ships of the Pacific command since 1961.

Although Grilse was given an interim survey of her hull and underwater fittings in August, 1962, this is her first full refit.

To aid the various trades in their refit job the U.S. Navy gave dookyard workers short courses in techniques at navy bases in San Francisco and the Pacific command since 1961.

One Rat Mars Record

A dead rat has been found in Alberta, which prides itself on being the only rat-free province in Canada.

The discovery was made in Drumbeller, 150 miles from the nearest border. Medical health officer Dr. A. Thomson said it was doubtful the rat had ever been alive in Drumbeller but urged residents to be on the lookout for more.

City solicitor Alan MacDonald of Edmonton has warned Calgary it could be "stuck for millions of dollars" if it proceeds with the CPR-inspired downtown development scheme involving relocation of CPR tracks. He pointed to a court decision allowing property owners to recover damages for future business losses due to the project.

Work has started in Edmontion in preparation for construction of a 25-storey CNR tower which will be part of a downtown redevelopment project.

Rev. J. D. Yoos of Sylvan Lake has been elected in Lethbridge as moderator of the 58th Presbyterian synod in Alberta.

Mayor William Hawrelak asys he will visit Ottawa next month to promote Edmonton as the site of a proposed $30,000,000 federal heavy water plant. Mayor Mike Maccagno of Lae La Biche, 120 miles northwest, has already been in Ottawa to suggest his town as the site.

Sixteen electrical contractors in Calgary have dropped damage action against the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers following a strike settlement. Withdrawal of the action was in the settlement terms.

The Edmonton fire department will ask city council to approve compulsory physical examination for firemen. A coroner's jury recommended annual checkups for firemen following the June 14 death of Capt. Robert Vint from a heart attack while fighting a blaze.

Manitoba

Mayor Steve Magnacea of Brandon saw his 1861 victory margin of 1,200 votes sliced to 284 when he was re-elected over James Creighton. The latter retired in 1961 after eight years as mayor.

Former police chief Harry Collister was elected to city council. A sewage lagoon bylaw was passed, a school money bylaw defeated.

tations are made to city council the question of Sunday movies for Victoria is closed, as far as city solicitor T. P. O'Grady is concerned.

Victoria theatre operators asked council Thursday to hold a plebiscite in December on Sunday movies, but the request was turned down because council felt such a plebiscite was beyond its jurisdiction. Attorney General Bonner indicated later a plebiscite should held and city solicitor T. P. O'Grady took issue with him.

Voulez-Vous Me Parler Francais?

By EILEEN LEABOYD

Parlez-vous? I write this In my best French, for of course being a Canadian we write in this language

We also speak very good French because we are a bilingual nation. We are told we are bilingual and of course we are.

Many Americans are afraid to come to this country on account of this fact. They don't think they will be able to communicate with us. "I would love to visit Canada," they say regretfully, "but of course, it's impossible, I have no French.

Alors, it is true we do have French in Canada. We know because we see it on our pack-ages of Shredded Wheat.

Also we have "par avion" on our air mail stickers, and defense de fumer" in our airplanes, and "sortie" at the exits. Even our money is bilingual. Every bilingual Canadian knows un dollar is a dollar. One of our biggest bilingual problems comes with shampoo instructions - when the head is wet and soap is running into the eyes, it's tough turning the instructions upside down to get at the English. * * *

It was another shock to find that the French do not take fundly to people who murder language. They do not appreciate pidgin French, half-French any more than we like to hear English come back at to that way.

* * * I cannot understand Canadians who do not wish to learn French. It is a great asset in the world today, just as any other language is.

I also cannot understand why the French-Canadians are mad at us for not speaking it. Why don't they do somethi about it, instead of all that shouting? Why don't they send us western Canadians some good French teachers? Let them fill our schools to overflowing with excellent French teachers.

Then we could blame it on them, if we still couldn't

Doing the Town

with DOROTHY FRASER

We never thought the day would come when we'd get excited over a bunch of Christmas cards ... but that's exactly what happened when we walked into Montague Bridgman's on Monday and saw the display of Yuletide greetings they'd just finished setting up ... Our only advice is ... if you want to send out cards this year that are different, distinctive, downright beautiful ... and whose expensive look belies their prices ... (there are some little gens from W.A. Christmass at the will be held in general convener. In charge of stalls are, Mrs. Green great early separate and they're all lovely ... We thought the Spain, Demmark, Holland and Germany ... We thought their restrained. Christmassy themes ... but they're all lovely ... Wording is line stalls for the children. It's Gracious Living time . . .

We love that phrase "gracious living". Even if we occasionally fail to live up to its connotations it's something devoutly to be aspired to ... So we're happy to tell you that the period Oct. 24 to Nov. 2 has been designated "Gracious Living Time" at Birks ... During these ten days. Birks wish to encourage people to use and enjoy fine English bone chins and fine crystal ... and to this end, have lopped a whopping 20% off their regular prices for a large number of patterns in Minton, Aynsley, Royal Stafford, Wedgwood. Royal Worcester and Royal Doulton dinnetware ... as well as fine hand-cut lead crystal by Stuart, Webb-Corbett, Phillips and Clapperton ... For example, a 5-piece place setting in the Belbrachen pattern of Minton is regularly $19.75 ... but during this sale may be had for $15.80 ... while the special price for a $45.0 Georgian crystal goblet is but $3.60 ... All this dinnetware and crystal is open stock ... and may be purchased in complete sets, place settings, or individual places ... We'd say an opportunity like this doesn't knock twice ... at least not for a long while ... So you'd be real smart to visit Birks this coming week ... Birks Jewellers, 706 Yates $4., EV $4841.

Drapery fabrics from Europe . . .

Standard Furniture are mighty proud of their current display of imported drapery and upholstery fabrics... and well they might be!... We doubt very much if such an interesting and comprehensive... display has ever been seen here before... The thing is, every last one of these fabrics was parsonally selected by Mr. Oliphant, the drapery department manager, who recently returned from a three month buying trip abroad. He went right to the leading mills of Europe and made his selections with the tastes of Victoria women in mind... and results are spectacular.

"Father always referred to Victoria as God's country." June, 1963, in the former said Mrs. Moore.

A barber by trade, Mr. Whittaker opened his own shop, first on Johnson Street, later relocating in the 1390 block on Government Street.

How to Be Goof-Proof!

them off to school and after a moot point on which many school. I thinks some act like parents — and older brothers brats and should be spanked by and sisters — and experts on me, but my mother has always child-raising disagree. It's for Martha writes me: "I try to be polite and do what's right, but I'm forever making boo-boos. Can you tell me how to be 'goof-proof'?"

Actually a teen-ager's best insurance against social accidents and disabilities is common sense. Here are three test situations. How would you handle them? (Check YES or

The Desperate Date-Bid

You and another girl had hoped to be asked to a dance, but all except the least popular boys found partners. So you plan to go to a movie instead. Then your friend calls and happily reports Dick has asked her to the dance. He's a 'drip" and you've heard three other girls turned down his bids. You now feel absolutely left out of everything. What would you say to her?

1. Tell her you hope she has fun and you still get a hid? Yes-, No-

2. Remark that she's lucky, inferring he's a prize and she isn't? Yes-, No-3. Say he's certainly lucky after being turned down so

The correct answers are "Yes" for 1 and "No" for 2 and Study the answers you gave. Do they hint a little at insincerity or sour-grapevine gossip tendencies? These are far more serious than errors in etiquette.

When Your Poise Goes Smash

It's a formal party with everybody on best behavior. You've got a .900 fielding average as a second baseman, fumble, drop a fine china cup or fragile glass. 1. Do you quickly mop up, quietly pick up the pieces?

2. Then, later, tell the hostess what happened and say

3. And loudly declare you'll pay for it, insisting on knowing its cost? Yes—, No—.

Answers to 1 and 2 are "Yes", and to 3 the answer

If the cup or glass was really rare and valuable, the hostens took a calculated risk in using it at the party. She wouldn't want you to be upset about its breaking. If it's of small value and easily replaced, she'd not want to bother you about it.

Too much talk about price is never in good taste. In some cases you might want to give her a cup and saucer set or relish dish that would go with her china. But this would depend on how well you knew her. It's a strictlypersonal decision for which you use social sense to suit

Greeting or Grilling?

At a no-partner party at your school, club or church, you are attracted to a newcomer who looks and acts dife

1. Should you ask where he's from, how he happened to attend the party, and see that he meets several of the group? Yes-, No

2. Encourage him to talk about family, background, tracks? What his father works at, and is it important? Just which church he attends, at what address? Which clubs, and are they good ones? Yes ___, No ___.

The right answers are "Yes" for 1 and 2, "No" for 3.

Give yourself 1 point for every question answered correctly on the three test situations, and take 2 added points if you said "No" to 3 in the last situation. If you scored 10, you will make a lot of friends. On whatever you missed, don't repeat that friend-losing tactics again. Here are more tips to avoid "goofs":

. . . And Some More Tips!

When in doubt, ask — when to arrive, what to wear, how to get there and home again. Much embarrassment comes from not knowing "what everybody knows."

Adjust to the unexpected -- but with a minimum of haste and maximum of dignity, as they said at an elite boys' school when rain halted outdoor ceremonies. Remember this when family quarrels arise, or an ex-steady appears out of the past.

Be spoot-proof — to take teasing and bounce back with a laugh at yourself, so others laugh with, not at, you. This built-in "goof insurance" adds self-assurance.

Rub It and See!

BIRCH TREE-(E.P., Sidney). One way you can tell the grey birch from the paper birch is to rub the barkpreferably with the sleeve of your best blue serge suit! The chalky whiteness will rub off the paper birch, but not off the grey.

Another way of telling the two apart is by the bark markings. The bark of the paper birch has horizontal black strine-like markings, while the grey is marked with clearly defined triangular black patches or "monkey faces," as children call them.

Actually, for the first three years of life, the grey birch has whiter bark than the paper birch, and it is only in later life that the latter develops the full silvery beauty of its bark. In my opinion, the grey birch is nothing like handsome a tree, but at least it has the virtue of thriving in soil so poor no other tree would grow.

* * * FERTILIZER USE-(N.H.McL., Victoria). Your fertilizer with the formula 27-14-0 on the label is very rich in phosphate and has no potash in it at all. It was probably formulated for use on grain crops, but you could use it on your lawn and for the leafy vegetables such as lettuce and spinach. It is not a good fertilizer for root crops and carrots and beets fed with it would probably develop all tops and no roots.

PROPAGATION OF FIRETHORN-(W.W.R., Victoria). The pyracantha or firethorn may be increased either by seeds from the berries or by cuttings; the cuttings are easiest. These will root best in a closed coldframe but at a pinch they will do quite well in a sheltered outdoor bed of very sandy soil. covering each slip with a jam jar until

Take your slips from the new growth of the past summer, four to six inches long. Tear off these twigs with a thin heel of wood from the parent branch. Trim this heel neatly with a pair of scissors so there are no rough edges. Cut off and discard the thin tip of the shoot. Moisten the heel end, dip in a hormone rooting powder such as Rootone. Seradix or Stim-Root and insert to a depth of 112 fnches.

TRAINING CYPRESS REDGE J.J.O'B., Duncan). As you wish your hedge of Lawson cypress to reach a height of only six feet, it will not be necessary to trim the tips very much before it reaches this height. If you find the growth is becoming a bit spindly, then the topmost shoots can have their tips removed in mid-April.

In training the hedge, make sure the top is always narrower than the base, giving the hedge a wedge-like shape. If you let it develop the other way-wider at the top-the bottom branches will turn brown and die for lack of sunshine, air and rain. To encourage good healthy growth, maintain a heavy surface mulch or both sides using old rotted manure, homemade compost or lawn mowings,

Movie Issue Closed

Unless further representations are made to city council the question of Sunday movies for Victoria is closed, as far as city solicitor T. P. O'Grady is concerned.

Victoria theatre operators asked council Thursday to hold a plebiscite in December on Sunday movies, but the request was turned down because council felt such a plebischte was beyond its jurisdiction.

Attorney General Bonner in dicated later a plebiscite should be held and city solicitor T. P. O'Grady took issue with him. ACT UPON IT

Mr. O'Grady said the city cant hold a referendum unless the Municipal Act is amended to give the city the right to hold a plebiscite and act upon

Dr. Gilbert Kennedy, deputy attorney-general, declined to comment on Mr. O'Grady's remarks, saying:

Ferries Stopping Soon In Subsidy Stalemate

Noisy Audience

Obeys Conductor

There won't be any ferry service after Nov. 1 in Barkley Sound on the west coast of the Island unless the highways department and Alberni Marine Transportation Co. come to terms on a subsidy.

The transportation company's bid for a $38,000 annual subsidy has been turned down by the highways department.

Manager John Monrufet
says the company cannot conto operate the ferry Lady Rose between Ucluelet, Port Albion, Sarita and Bamfield on its present subsidy of $10,400 a year.

ONLY BIDDER

Tenders were opened last Monday for a new annual contract to go into effect Nov. 1. The present contractor was the only bidder.

"It was too high," said a highways official. Tenders were called a sec-ond time and Alberni Marine submitted the same bid. It was rejected.

CHANGED MINDS

Mr. Monrufet said two other ompanies which had intended to bid changed their minds when they discovered it would cost them 35 per cent more than the Alberni firm.

The highways department is investigating the situation and plans to hold talks with the erry company to attempt to ork out an agreement. "I don't see how our bid could be reduced," said Mr. Monrufet, "We couldn't live on it if we did."

"Tranquility of Autumn," photographer Alice Kimoff has titled this study of Cameron Lake, Vancouver Island.

Honey Chile

A long time ago I was on the stage of the old Alcasar Theatre in San Francisco with Gladys George, who was then a lovely and talented nineteen. Later, in Hollywood, she made a name for herself in the title role of a fine picture called "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie." And I think the adjective describes equally well small Honey Chile, my golden cocker, who was fourteen a little while ago. Which is, what? The equal of 98 human years? A good age. And everyone who acquires a lovely pet acquires in that moment a dim and distant shadow which must inevitably loom ever larger, ever closer, as the inexorable years roll on. The hour will come . . .

Honey was the runt of the litter, in kennels run by an odd, friendly, kind-hearted and rather lonely soul who lived on the old Island Highway and adored his dogs. She was a funny little orange-brown scrap with two dark eyebrow-shaped marks, where the way, half-way between eyes and

And here came Honey indeed, almost a foot in length by now and a pound heavier, charging across the grass like a one-pup brigade, her funny little mind apparently full of the notion that the day had been too quiet, too long, to hurl herself at one of us as though thrown, knocking the breath out of herself and rendering us helplens with laughter. She never whined when hurt, never complained. Once, trailing one of us as we went down the hill, along the winding trail through the tree to the mailbox, she thought she naw a strange dog passing the property, wholly legally, on the road below. She didn't approve, and she couldn't wait to get there and say so. At the point where the trail takes to stone steps down a 12 or 15-foot cliff, she simply flung herself from the top out into space. Though underbrush below broke her fall, it must have rocked her. But she wasted nelther time nor breath in a yelp, merely picked up the remains and dashed off to what she considered her bounden duty-the protection of her own against possible threat,

She took a long time to get over that, but evidently told herself firmly that she expect life to be thus, because later similar occasions never again saw her quite so upset.

Another object of her deep affection was Tom, the gardener, a quiet, hard-working Scotsman who came every Tuesday at 8 a.m. on his bicycle. Honey knew well when it was Tuesday. At ten minutes to eight she was on top of her favorite rock, watching down the driveway, and when her friend appeared and went to work she followed him all day, lying contentedly beside him as he wested, and wickedly coaxing a good portion of his meal away from him when lunch time came. If, by any chance, it rained and no gardening was possible, or if Tom were sick, she maintained her morning vigil until ten past eight, at which time she realized she was out of luck. It was then plain to see that as far as Honey was con-cerned that particular Tuesday was a total los

Perhaps one of Honey's nicest traits, now that maturity has softened that tremendous puppy belligerence, is her utter trust in the humans she has accepted. This is something that the dog owner whose dominion over his animal is without kindness can never either know or deserve. Chile has never had hand or foot raised against her since her birth. Pick up a stick and march upon her with every appearance of threat, and she sits undisturbed,

Shadows Creep Closer

Old Church Evokes Childhood Memories

By ELIZABETH WAKEFIELD

Driving out through Metchosin the other day I stopped to look at the little white church and suddenly memories of the days when we used to live in a little brown house on the road to Witty's Lagoon came rushing back. This was more years ago than I care to think about, but the little brown house is still there.

After the First World War my father, as an ex-oldier got the house and a small bit of land under the Soldier Settlement scheme and he went in for farming in a small way. It was several years after this that I arrived on the scene.

In those days there was just the old one-room school-house with one teacher for eight grades and how she managed I don't know; but she did. There was the little white church, the Community Hall and the general store with the tennis courts next to it.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob Whitty were neighbors. They must have fived almost a mile away from usbut that was neighbors in those days. The Rev. Mr. Bolton was vicar of the church, which did not seem so small then. Mr. and Mrs. Elwood ran the general store, and if anyone needed a doctor in an emergency there was Dr. Ira Brown at the Quarantine Station at William Head. We used to visit the Helgesons at their farm further out and one of my first memories is of a concert at their house and Mrs. Whitney Griffiths sing-"Soup of the Evening, Beautiful Soup" from 'Alice in Wonderland."

My particular friend was William Milstead, who lived in a tittle house at the top of the hill near the school. One day this house was put on wheels and rolled down to the bottom of the hill to make way for something or other. Mr. Milstead was a bachelor and had a fascinating collection of tittle china and glass animals in a glassfronted cupboard. I once added a green china cat to the collection and now often wonder what happened to the green cat and the rest of the menagerie when Mr. Milstead died while I was away in Europe several years ago.

Another of my earlier memories is being frightened to tears by Father Christmas at the concert in the Community Hall, having no idea that it was only my friend Mr. Milstead very well disguised. We didn't go into town very often and anyway the stores did not have Santa Claus all over the place the way they do now, so Father Christmas was Father Christmas to us.

The little Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Metchosin, among old trees and graves-mes.

We didn't have a car and radio was unheard of. Our means of transportation was a small buggy with an even smaller Shetland pony called Sambo Sambo always came with us on our picnics to the beach, usually with two saddle bags full of picnic things slung over his back and me perched on top. Our big black Labrador, Bingo, came too and a couple of cats often along behind. At one time my pet baby goat, Nanny, came too, but Nanny's days were numbered. She was too fond of cating Mother's flowers. Nanny did for herself completely one day when she took a flying leap off a big log onto my Mother's beautiful Japanese parasol. The fact that Mother was underneath it at the time reading a book didn't improve matters at all. Nanny was sold to a neighbor for $5 the

The telephone was the old crank variety and of course we were on a party line with goodness knows how many other people on it. We each had our own ring, one long and two short or some such and everyone could hear everyone else's ring. This was the bane of my mother's existence because she said as soon as you lifted the receiver you could hear the other receivers going click, click, click all down the line and everyone knew everything about everybody.

The day we got our first car was a red letter one. It arrived at the farm in all its glory, a large, touring Chevrolet with flapping side curtain windows, Father was too busy with the farm to learn to drive it so the man who sold it to us had to teach Mother, I don't think drivers' tests had been invented yet,

It was not long after that that we left the farm and moved into town. It was a happy childhood in Metchosin even without radio, television, a car and all the other things that are considered so necessary today. Perhaps even

Thus have fourteen years slipped by, and their passage has left its mark on Honey Chile. The shining golden coat is flecked with silver, the misplaced eyebrows are lost in the encroaching grey of the muzzle, and she no longer hears the car far down the drive. Only when it swings into sight near the steon where she lies waiting does the welcoming back sound. And sometimes the hind legs collapse

This, says the vet, may well be the long-delayed result of that mad puppy leap from the cliff. I only know that when the difficulty first became noticeable my heart sickenesi, and I saw the shadow looming plain. But then, as time went by, it was obvious that the only one quite unconcerned with her form of locomotion was Honey Chile herself. She scorns to favor the silly legs. If she slides down the steps instead of proceeding in a dignified manner better suited to her years, she couldn't care less. If it takes her a little longer than before to clamber up them, she gets there in the end. Only up the steeper attic stairs to my workroom must I put a helping hand under the lethargic stern.

And recently she has taken on a new lease of life. An operation for some annoying skin tumors which were apparently bothering her much more than her unreliable hindquarters, finds her with renewed vigor, bright-eyed, shin-ing-coated, and with a quite in-credible appetite. The vet and his staff informed me that she had almost eaten him out of house and home-she wanted her own dinner and that of all the other patients. She likes everything that's crisp and orunchable . . . raw carrots, cabbage and lettuce dry bread and potato peelings, apple cores. And though the recent operation has left her shy a portion of one ear, all it does is give her a rakish, devil-may-care look, as she prances about coaxing for tit-bits. At least she thinks she's prancing. She feels prancing. And she still chases trespassers employing an interesting technique to make up for reduced powers of locomotion. She somehow runs with the front end, and uses the two back legs, bunched close together in the middle as supporting each other, though rather like a boy propelling a

Valiant little Honey. Her dauntless spirit isn't giving in to old age, not one whit. Perhaps this describes her:

"I have a render-vous with Death And I shall keep the tryst,

But let him not expect -my breath

Yielded at flick of wrist.

"A date's a date, Though there I'm bound, He'll not be glad I've come, I'll dig my heels into the

And jeer, to now my thumb!

"He'll know he's seen a fight that day,

And when I'm in the bag, 'I would,' (I'll grin to hear him say),

'I'd chose some other hag!' And so the shadow recedes again . . . for a little while.

With the Survey Crews in the Canadian North

GUY BLANCHET reminisces

Among his duties, the chief on a northern base line survey kept an official diary. This recorded the progress of the survey, the weather, and something of the country traversed. These surveys might last eight months during which the daily record described a voutine in which few events were noted as worthy of official attention. These diaries were usually dull and found a resting place in dusty vaults.

UNOFFICIAL eight months during which ich few events were noted as were usually dull and found

Back of the diaries, however, there is a human story of the men engaged during long months in unknown country. For this, one must draw on one's memory which is more likely to preserve what was curious and difficult rather than the long periods during which survey life followed its usual pattern, different from that of civilization but accepted as normal.

During the 1910s and 20s northern surveys were most active, parties were recruited chiefly in Edmonton, Prince Albert and Winnipeg where men with experience could be found. Half-breeds and Indians from the reservations were often employed. A party of twenty was made up of the technical staff, the 'buill gang," workers on line and trait, and the cook. When Indians were employed, one expected that when "the wrinkles in their bellies were filled" and the novelty of hearing trees crashing ended they would return home, promising to send "good man like me" to replace them.

Of those brought from "outside" few quit and none were fired. They were held by the job they had chosen, the opportunity of making a grubstake and by the difficulty of finding their way back to civilization. They usually accepted the life cheerfully and there was little friction among them. They made up their four-man tent parties themselves. Men who work together are friendly in relexation.

There were exceptions. One year, when experienced men were scarce, I engaged three youths who, although inexperienced, appeared capable. They stuck together, which is often bad, and resented being allotted to different jobs. At a time and place where it was inconvenient to me, they quit. I warned them of the difficulties of the journey out but sail they insisted.

Invisible 'Ink'

Unintentionally, I taught them a lesson. I had no ink in camp to make out their cheques but had a bright idea... indine would do for red ink. Months later, on my way out to Edmonton, I found them at Lac la Biche, the first settlement with a bank. When they had presented their cheques... the red of the indine had disappeared in drying. They had had to get jobs while waiting for me.

While men were not fired, one once resigned. He was neither expable nor happy at his job and when we reached Fort McMurray he sent me a letter of resignation through the cook. It read: "Dear Sir—Please accept my resignation. I do not find my job as cook's helper satisfactory for my associates congenial..." He did not add that I was incompetent.

He had made a wine decision for when I met him some years later he was a successful businessman.

One member of the party was given the job of explorer. His duty was to map the country 12 miles north and south of the line. He had to be selected with care as a capable woodsman and a good observer for it is unwise to send an inexpert man alone in the wilderness, and one had to depend on his integrity as to where he went and what he saw. One year, my explorer was an elderly Frenchman. His work was satisfactory until . . .

One day I instructed him to go to the end of the line and blaze a line to locate camp three miles ahead. He did not return that night and on our move we saw no sign of blazes, nor where he had travelled, nor of Joe himself. Late next night he reached camp, his clothes torn, his eyes wild and with a fantastic story.

He had gone to the end of the line, climbed a tree to study the country ahead . . . 18 hours later when dawn was just breaking, he had come to, up to his neck in the water of a large lake. In his bewildered wanderings he had happened to reach the line cutting and found his way into camp. His experience had destroyed his self confidence and he was given a camp job. The only clue to what happened in those 18 hours was tracks of a man running on an Indian trail far from the scene of his confused story. Why wasn't be drowned? Perhaps the cold water had restored his reason, lost in his fall from the tree.

Albert was a half-breed with a good education, an amiable disposition and northern experience, according to his claims. I engaged him for a northern expedition but found that he was one of those unfortunates who had failes between the ways of his mother's people of the wilderness and of his father's city life.

We were traveiling by scow down Athabaska River. Albert claimed to know the river and I gave him the job of steersman. Passing the first small rapid, Albert swung the sweep the wrong way, heading into the sweepers. I was able to avoid a crash, then turned to Albert and said, "I thought you were a steersman." Quite undisturbed and with an amisble smile, he replied, "I'm ALMOST a steersman," and he went on and on.

This recalled the Rapide du Jolle Fou where the steersman hit the only exposed rock, and that of the Klondykers drifting down the Athabaska when the scow chose the unnavigable west channel at Grand Rapids and the night watchman who was sleeping on the front deck was east overboard when the scow ran up on a rock. He drowned. The others were rescued.

Cheerful Helper

Albert might have been either of these . . . On the survey I gave him the job of cook's helper, which he accepted cheerfully.

I had occasion to make a journey of several days down a river on a raft and return cross-country. Albert could be spared. He was a great talker. I could not avoid this on the raft but I could outwalk him on the return, just far enough to escape his flow of chatter. Finally we reached a point from which, by travelling late, I could reach camp; but Albert was tired and suggested that he camp and come in next day.

When he had not arrived by afternoon I took horses and went back to see what was his trouble. He was where I had left him and told me that during the night he had become sick and thought that he was going to die. With great thoughtfulness he had written a note saying that he was well when I left him and had pinned this on his coat. Not many men would do that.

On another trip with Albert we met an Indian hunter who told him in Cree, "Big war among the white men." This was in 1914. There had been no talk of war when we left civilization and the Indian did not know who were fighting nor where. We had almost forgotten about this war rumer when a month later an old newspaper reached us from which we learned who were fighting and that the end of the war was in sight,..., the Germans were being badly beaten. Such was our news of the world.

Doctor, Dentist

Among my duties was camp doctor and dentist. This was a necessity as most of the time we were out of reach of professional help. I carried first aid kit, with additions and instructions to assist diagnosis and treatment. Out of several hundred men I employed during the years all survived. It was a healthful life and the men were tough . . . they needed to be.

My most frequent calls were for axe cuts which required field treatment with antiseptic and needle. This was painful both to doctor and patient. I had cases of appendicitis, fever and minor allments. I carried both strong and sugar pills (as most doctors do) and tried to distinguish between "lead swinging" and serious cases... my worst, a fever that developed into mastoid infection. I could treat the fever, but it was a month later that I was able to bring him to where he could get hospital treatment... just in time, for the infection was affecting his brain.

Fur traders at the outposts carried a stock of patent medicines. Among these I once noticed "Dr. Gordon's Elixir, good for all ailments, internal and external, of man and heast." The trader told me that it was quite popular. I purchased a supply which was soon exhausted. I think it had an alcohol base.

Dentistry was difficult and unpleasant, taxing the skill of the operator and the endurance of the patient. I avoided extraction as far as possible by use of oil of cloves, temporary fillings and advice. One case I remember. I had the patient lying on his back, my knee on his chest and a pair of plier (Years later I trollers had a They beat the club until he and magic, pro his chest and the best that I could do with a pair of pliers was to dislodge, not extract. (Years later I found that Eskimo spirit controllers had a treatment for most ailments. They beat the patient over the head with a club until he was unconscious; then by song and magic, produced a cure—or else.

One might think that constant exposure to wet and cold might cause rheumatic afflictions. Apparently not, for I have observed that they are more prevalent among people living a sendentary life. I suppose the active life in the open, germ-free atmosphere was the explanation

Curse of the North

Insect pests are the curse of the North. Some writers exaggerate the size, number and ferocity of these pests. For a season they do make life miserable. I have seen mosquitos gathered about a freshly killed caribou in a grey cloud and, when emerging from my mosquito-proof door in the morning into the roar of the reception committee, only a smudge brought relief. I have read claims that when the mosquito pest is at its height, they will ignore a smudge. This is not true... smoke will always drive them away.

During the day, one must meet the fly pest as best one can. Head nets and repellants give some relief. For myself, and I have met them year after year in the North, I have found the best protection was a drill parka with a hood close fitting about the neck and ears.

Of the pests, the mosquito is best known. Her hum while she is selecting her point of attack is more-exasperating than her landing and sucking blood to her capacity, then departing with the roar as of an overloaded machine, leaving behind a poison-producing itch... serious in some cases.

The mosquito appears in the official diaries of summer surveys as pressed specimens on page after page, enclosed by a ruddy spot ... the life-blood of some unfortunate.

Sneak Attack

Black flies thrive in some areas and operate during the heat of the day while the mosquito is more active at night, during rain, and is driven to shelter by wind. The black fly does not sing nor hover. He gives no warning, for his is a sneak attack through any opening. The sting is often poisonous.

Another serious pest, unrecorded in the official diary, is the buildog or horse fly and his cousin, the deer fly. As suggested by their name, they are a particular scourge to horses. Fortunately, their season is short and limited to conditions of sunlight. They abhor smoke and the pack horses can be protected by smudges, and feed at night. He does not sting

... he bites, and could kill a helpless animal. One of our pack train-became mired and was not missed for some time. When he was discovered, he was bleeding profusely, his eyes were closed and he was temporarily blind. A victim of the flies.

The buildog has a deadly enemy, the hornet. If horse flies can enter a tent, they gather at the peak. Presently with a roar like a dive bomber, a hornet arrives. He grasps a fly, which puts up no resistance. They fall to the ground . . . there is a snip, and off come head and wings. The hornet flies away with his arrive.

Strange Immunity

Wasps and hornets are not common in the North and vary with the season. They are particularly bad in a hot, dry summer. If a nest should be encountered near the trail, they might stampede the horses. A tree on line in which there is a nest must be cut, regard-

One year, east of Lake Winnipeg, they were particularly bad. Every day we were stung ... but one member of the crew was immune. When a man was driven away from a tree that had to be cut, this individual would quietly complete the job. The angry insects swarmed about him but did not attack.

With the approach of autumn, the fly season erids. Smudges are no longer necessary and the outdoor world of forest, lake and atream can be enjoyed.

There is practically no danger from wild animals. Bears and wolves may be numerous but they avoid their worst enemy—man.

There is one danger that may never have heen recorded, however—falling, fire-killed trees. Much of our northern woodlands has been fire swept, killing the trees. Another fire may consume them, but areas remain in which the dead trees rot at ground level and a strong wind sends them crashing to the ground without warning.

When working through fire-killed old forests, there is danger of being caught by a crashing tree. There is no warning. There are weard noises created by the wind in the naked branches, an occasional crash in the distance, marking the death of a monarch. Once, during a move, I was leading a pack horse. We were passing through the desolation of an old fire. I heard a rending noise, followed by a vast crash. The halter was wrenched from my hand . . , I looked back. A great tree had fallen just behind me and had killed the horse I was leading.

Man's World

A northern survey, lasting for months, was a man's world. By chance, the line might pass an Indian settlement and we could see something quite different from men-and houses ... a woman. It was usually a fleeting glimp e but it provided a new subject for camptire talk ... romance colored by imagination.

'I remember once, after months in the northern wilderness, when my transit was set up on a ridge overlooking the valley of the Smoky, I heard a sound in the valley. It was not an animal. I searched the valley with my telescope. There, buside a teepee from which smoke was curling, was a woman, at her chores. Of course, this feeling of strangeness is lost when one meets the throngs on the city streets. Men with axes and paddles are forgotten.

During long months, cut off from strangers and news of the world, we still preserved a certain social life. In the evening, this centryd about the cook tent with the cook as mine host. He, too, enjoyed the relaxation after a lonely, somewhat dull day with only his cookee for company; and cookees were not selected for high spirits or intelligence.

These evening gatherings were good for morale, for, in my experiences, cooks discouraged "grousing" and it was good to hear lively talk and laughter as the boys relaxed in the genial atmosphere created by the cook's tales of his adventures, which recalled experiences of their own in which they, too, were heroes, Woodsmen were not insensible to the charms of nature, to changes brought by the passing seasons... as winter merged through spring and into summer. There was the renewal of life among animals, as leaves and vegetation flourished and faded into that delightful season of pause; there was autumn ending in the falling of the last leaf... the last great wedges of geese honking their way southward, warning of Arctic storms.

It was a life of constant movement, across the country, through the seasons. There was anticipation in returning to a new camp, or the one which they had left that morning might have some new interest in a lake or stream or a hill lifting from the muskeg. Something different.

Then there was always the blue ridge of the horizon. For many days it promised vaguely. But beyond . . . the country repeated itself. In the distance a new, blue ridge. Disappointment changed to hope.

Official diaries are important in their records of the survey of new lands. They may become of historical interest. But it is in that unofficial record of memory that the story of adventuring and pioneering is enlivened... the story of a life that has passed and experience never to be repeated.

THE STAMP PACKET

by Faith Angus On August 1, the British post office issued two pictorial air letter sheets, one of which shows on the reverse side, the Tower and Tower Bridge in color, and the other, a view of the Houses of Parliament and the River Thames. There is an extra charge of 4 pence for these entirely lithogrphed forms.

A three to four months supply of the Isle of Man 3d, stamps has been printed on paper left over from the printing of the 1961 CEPT special issue. This paper is couted and heavier than usual. A new 2/3d, stamp depicting a fish called silver trevally or "ophie," was issued by Norfolk Island on Sept. 23. It has been printed in three-color photogravure by Harrison & Sons, and was designed by Mrs. L. Marsh,

The Postal Administration of Tonga has advised that the dies for all values of the set of coin stamps have been destroyed and no further quantities can ever be made.

His Journals Are Vivid in

Dally's Pictures

Main purpose of my ramble round the head end of Cowichan Bay a few weeks ago was to visit the Welds, Brian and Gerry (for Geraldine), friends of 30 years or more. Retired a few months ago from the RCMP, Brian can now watch son Michael from the sidelines. Mike donned the scarlet and gold only this year.

"If this is retirement, give me more," is apt to be the comment when you take in Welds' shangri-la, an old farmhouse high on a bluff overlooking Cowichan Bay, with a stretch of prairie-like river delta in the immediate foreground. Close up, at the foot of their garden, the broad Cowichan River takes a loop in, as if to may a final hello before slipping out to sea.

The faithful Rollei tugging at my neck, I took the easy winding path to the river, to size up the photo possibilities of the hazy late September sunlight. There was just a hint of woodsmoke in the air, the sort of incense that went with the cricket chorus around me, then suddenly the slick and silent river surface exploded in a giant splash. First of the apawning salmon were heading upstream.

All of which brought to mind another photo journalist who wandered these parts in similar season 94 years ago. Then the natives weren't watching television—they were watching you! Instead of bridges over the river, there were fish weirs to bur the path of the incoming salmon.

Fred Dally was the ploneer with camera and pencil and from his pictures and notes tin the Provincial Archives) you learn that the fish trap was like a split cedar picket fence running from bank to bank, with openings here and there so that the baffled salmon could slip into a small corral, which was another split cedar job. From this confined space they were speared, later to be split and amoked.

According to Dally, if the Indian fisherman got tired, he squatted on the bank, and let the lethal end of his fish spear rest on the corral, while he held the other end against his forehead. Thus when a fish banged around the trap it woke him up. I knew a mechanic once who used to hold a file against the engine block with his teeth and tell which wristpin or piston was misbehaving. Probably learned it from the Indians!

Although old-timer Dally was fundamentally a portraitist he did manage during his eight-year stay on the Island (1862-1870) to get off the beaten track and leave us some excellent scenes of Cariboo mines and miners. the Fraser Canyon tote road, and scores of pictures of triboomen in native dress, not to speak of ships and sailormen in and around

A Bluecoat boy (like Coleridge and Lamb)
Dally was 22 when he landed at Enquimalt from the China clipper Cyclone, apparently neither clipper nor cyclone, for it took 41s months to get him here from London.

A great man for jotting down details, he kept a log of the trip with daily entries of latitude and longitude, notes of the food, the passengers and the weather. When finally he arrived, on Sept. 21, 1862, he wrote, "a most beautiful view from the ship, everything in quiet repose no apparent life on shore, which seemed covered with pine trees." Well, after all, what did he expect; it was Sunday morning. Anyway the skipper shocked him out of this pleasant mood with the dampening remark, "What on earth did you come HERE

After negotiating the muddy wagon road to Victoria, he and seven pals spent their first night on the floor of a Negro's cabin "just off Government Street" from which position they caught glimpses of the stars through holes in

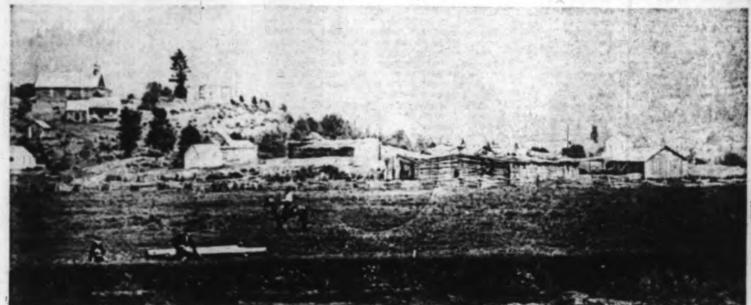

It wasn't long before he opened a photographic studio at Fort and Government, at first on the northeast corner, then moving across Fort to cosy up alongside the Brown Jug saloon, where Mr. Cull today holds out.

From this spot Daily produced his albums of city and Island views that have made him the historian's friend.

In the summer of 1866 he had the good fortune to be included in HMS Scout's trip around Vancouver Island, and at Nootka pictured Indians wilder than any he'd seen around Victoria, some of the men completely naked. He noted the tattooing on their faces, took in details of cedar bark capes and hats, and figured, perhaps correctly, that they hadn't changed much since Capt. Cook saw them. As a matter of fact he noticed a couple of designs on house posts that were actually portrayed in Cook's book.

Dally probably took the first pictures of Indians in Quatsino Sound, and rounding Cape Scott his quick eye took in everything around Fort Rupert. When he took a picture of the seashore Indian village at Comox, his notes draw attention to a smudge of smoke at one end of the beach "where that morning they were burning the corpse of a girl who died of some loathsome disease."

The next year he was lucky enough to latch on to Governor Seymour's party going in to Barkerville for a look-see. On this occasion the patriotic miners decided the Queen's representative should have a 21-gun salute. Too early for dynamite, the boys made out with cans of nitro-glycerine, which is a pretty fair substitute. However, just as explosive was their suggestion that between every blast the governor and his staff (and probably everyone else assembled) should knock back a bumper of champagne! That the suggestion was faithfully carried out is evident by the glassy-eyed group that Dally photographed!

A HORSE HAIR is discernable in the middle of the photograph. The stone church at Comiaken is shown before the roof was added. It was in use from 1870 to 1880. The picture was taken in 1869 by Fred Dally.

CECIL CLARK feature

He made another trip to Barkerville the following year, this time alone, and it was probably in the fall of 1869 that he went up to Cowichan landing no doubt from a steamer at Cowichan Bay (or Harrisville as they called it then), where he could hire a wagon from Sam Harris, owner of the John Bull Inn. In the style of Matthew Brady in the U.S., he'd have to have a wagon, to carry his gear, which included a barrel of water. You can also figure that he filled the barrel from a Harrisville horse trough, for he left a horsehair stuck in the emulsion of one of his best shots! (Note the illustration.)

Equipped thus Fred Dally jounced and swayed his way over primitive forest roads to picture not only the Cowichan River fish trap but also Father Rondeault's hilltop atone church in the course of construction (which dates the occasion), as well as an excellent shot of the Indian village at Quamichan Lake, where he tasted smoked clams and said they were delicious. He took other pictures of farmers, their cabins and clearings, and an excellent shot of Mr. Reece, the Anglican clergyman, on his veranda.

This was probably Dally's last sally "behind the beyond," for a year later he sold out and moved to Philadelphia to become a dentist.

However, while his camera offers one dimension of the pioneer scene, his notes reveal still another. A fr'instance is the morning in 1866 when a few brief lines in The Colonies acquainted Viotorians with the sudden death of Dr. Walker; which doesn't mean a thing until you ruffle through Dally's notes to find that the good doctor's passing was a mite unconventional.

Back in his past, according to Dally, the doc had been a surgeon-commander in the RN, and once accompanied an expedition searching the barren Arctic wastes for trace of Sir John Franklin and his men. Later "the booze got him," as the pioneer so pithily put it, and I guess Walker tried to mend things by a move to the new world. However, in brawling, bawdy Victoria, he certainly chose the wrong place to recuperate.

At the time of his death the shelves of his Oriental Alley surgery held an array of bottles and jars, in which were preserved various odd-ments plucked from the innards of alling manish. Perhaps, for all we know, the doctor occasionally used them to point up the sort of penalty nature exacts for human error. Anyway, the morning he was found dead on his surgery sofs, on the floor around him lay the empty jars and assorted specimens. Only the preservative, strong in alcoholic content, was missing. It was inside Dr. Walker!

Burial Island

Another macabre little story, gleamed from Dally's notes, tells of the time he nearly scared himself to death on Burial Island, which you can still see up in Selkirk Water flanked by sawmills. Generations of Victorians have picnicked and swum there, usually ending the day by setting the brush afire.

Here, however, Indians once buried their dead, and back in the '60s when old King Freezy of the Songhees died with the murder of 11 wives on his soul—it was due to his rank that his remains were placed in a little wooden house on the island, having a door at one end and windows at the sides. Around this cedar wood tajmahal, Freezy's grieving followers left a few articles he might need in the hereafter, like a sack or two of flour, an oil lamp, a gun, and so forth.

Dally, wanting a close look at all this, rowed over to the island after the funeral and clambering up the rocks gingerly approached the little wooden mausoleum. Finally when he was close enough to peer in one of the windows, suddenly he found the hair on the back of his neck resembling a crew cut! Peering right back at him from within the darkened interior was the face of a man—a wideeyed human being!

Illustration by Joan M. Smith.

Dally was almost scared to death.

Back he jumped in sudden alarm and it took him a minute or two to figure out what had "developed" this "latent image." Then it dawned on him. There was a mirror inside and he'd been looking at himself!

Another incident he described, with the same Edgar Allen Poe slant, happened at Cowichan Bay near the old atone church, when he noticed beside the trail a pile of about 30 human akulls. There were no other bones around, just skulls; and they had been there some time judging by the green moss on some of them. It was all very queer, but when he asked questions of the Indians they couldn't (or wouldn't) offer any information. He concluded therefore they were left-overs from some bygone tribal affray; for as was well known, when the Cowichans said "heads you lose," they weren't just whistlin' Dixle!

Dally picked up one of the skulls and as he examined it his heart must have skipped a beat, for suddenly a snake stuck its head out of one of the eye sockets to flicker its tongue at him! We don't know whether he dropped it in a hurry, but if he did he picked it up again, for it was one of the old-time flat heads." In fact he thought it so interesting that he sent it back to London where, today, it reposes in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons in Lincoln's Inn Fields; and if you think the early-day Cowichans were tough on losers, you should remember that in Lincoln's Inn Fields 16th century Englishmen used to hang, draw and quarter their losers!

Another of Dally's jottings tells the inter-

Another of Dally's jottings tells the intereating story of an old Indian he knew here, a man with phenomenal skill as a wood carver, and the ability to dapticate anything, no matter how intricate the design.

Says Dally, "There's a picture of him in one of my albums, down in the bottom left corner. He has a ring through his nose . . ."

One day Dally gave him a $5 piece and chunk of gold (there was lots of it in the town then) to make a pair of cuff links, following the eagle design from the gold piece.

The old man went away and nothing was heard of him for two or three weeks, by which time Dally had begun to think he could write the whole thing off as a bad debt. Suddenly one day the old man reappeared with a heautiful pair of outf links, each engraved with a tiny eagle. He even had some of the gold left over, which he handed back to Dally, along

For Halloween, Here Are Some

Any time is party time as far as children are concerned. However, Halloween offers special scope for imaginative planning. Ghosts, witches, black cats and goblins make Halloween exciting.

Strangely enough all these queer creatures love to eat, so food is an important part of Halloween festivities. Even if you are not planning a party you will want to have treats on hand when little people come knocking at your door.

Today's recipes will feature cookies, "mndwitches," spicy apple cider and some old-fashioned Walnut Cream Candles. The recipe for these sweets was found in a dogeared church recipe book published in 1907. And we will include a recipe for Witches' Brew in case you are planning a Halloween

I don't quite know why, but molasses seems to go with traditional Halloween cooking. In any case we'll start off with Molasses Spiced Cider and big Molasses Walnut Mounds . . . cookies happily combining the amouth mellowness of es with companionable spices.

MOLASSES SPICED CIDER...8 servings. 4 slices of lemon cut in halves, 12 whole cloves, 2 quarts cider or apple jules, % cup unsulphured molasses, two 2-inch sticks cinnamon and % cup lemon jules.

Stud the lemon slices with the cloves. Combine the cider, unsulphured molasses, cinnamon and lemon slices in a saucepan. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer 15 minutes. Remove cinnamon sticks. Add lemon juice. Serve hot in mugs. Place a half slice of clove-studded lemon in each mug. This is a warming beverage to serve on any chilly fall night, as well as Hal-

Roll out dough a part at a time, on lightly floured board to % inch thickness. With floured cookie cutters cut into witches, cats, pumpkins, or use cardboard patterns and a sharp knife. Arrange cookies on bak-ing sheets. Bake in pre-heated 350° oven for from 10 to 12 minutes. Cool on wire racks. Frost with the icing augar mixed with 1 egg white and flavoring plus a little orange food coloring. Make the faces with chocolate chips for eyes and nose and bits of red glace cherries for mouths. Let the children help with these . . . they could be iced and decorated as part of the party fun.

And now for our Walnut Creams. I can remember these from when I was a little girl. They were sort of special, particularly around Christmas time. Although they are so delicious they are made with a simple, uncooked

DEAR RELOISER

I happen to be a happy bachelor. But . . . also a particular one.

I buy very expensive shoes. Some of mine have fancy stitching around the sole. After these are worn a few months they collect dust. Worse yet, after you go to a shoeshine parlor they get polish in them.

Now, when I buy a pair of shoes, I always coat the stitching with two coats of colorless fingernell polish. Then if I should happen to step in some mud, or shoepolish gets on the shoe stitching, all it takes is a swipe with a damp cloth!

I have read in your col-umn that people use steel wool to tighten a loose wood screw.

I agree with you that steel wool is good, and the matches, too. But, may I suggest for these who do not have the old-fashioned kit-chen matches or steel wool that they could take a piece of paper that has been soaked in water, wind it around the screw and replace it in the same hole? It works!

Once the paper is dry and the wood itself has absorbed the moisture it does a darn good job.

Recently a reader wrote that she would like to know how to remove nicotine stains from her fingers.

DEAR HELOIS

I can give her a very simple remedy and it works every time; it will not only stop the stain, but keep it away.

All one has to do is hold the cigarette so that the smoke does not touch the fingers. In other words keep the burning end of the cigarette ABOVE the hand instead of below, as it is the smoke that causes these stains.

I know this will work, because I found it out years ago and have not had a bit of stain since. Grateful

From a Trouper of 1905 Advice Is Available

There is to be a pantomime in Victoria this year. Not that there have not been pantomimes here before, such as "The Snow Queen," "Toad of Toad Hill" and those of Reginald Hincks. But this year it's to be the absorbing story of "Dick Whittington and His Cat," presented by the St. Matthias' Little Theatre Society, directed by Tony Burton, choreographed by Bebe Eversfield, music by Jack Lenaghan and Reg Stone, staged at Oak Bay Junior High School "to fill a Christmastime entertainment gap for young and

It's all very promising: "15 scenes of magic, music and madness," exuits a publicity release. I suspect that the temptation to become alliterative was too strong for the commonser of this announcement. "Magic" and "music" I will happily go along with — but "madness?"

Pantomimes, no matter how gay, colorful and brimming with humor, always have a story to tell, a moral to underline and a message to deliver and they are one form of theatrical art which never bequeathes a heritage of problems.

For the most part they are spun from fact: "Dick Whittington" certainly is Again, when Sir Augustus Harris—or, if you prefer, "Gus" as he was always called-replaced theatrical companies with casts of variety artists in pantomine and thus placed comic relief above drama, glamour was ensured by keeping the choice of plots to those enjoying the seal of nursery approval. But pantomines borrow and adapt freely. "Clinderella" includes part of the story from Rossini's opera, "La Cenerentola: "Babes in the Wooddips into history to use Rossin Hood and his Merry Men: the Widow Twankey in "Aladdin is named after of all things—"twankay," a brand of tea raced home from the east by the famous tea-clippers, Ariel, Lightning, and the rest.

But pantomime, with its involved ancestry, smatterings of folklore and moralities and complete freedom in the matter of coats, has often been called, simply, "a state of confusion." Howoften, over in Britain, has any state or condition of muddle and ambiguity been called "a proper pantomime"?

Yet one of the notable aspects of pantomime has been the calibre of the artists who have played in it before and after the era of Gus Among these were the eminent tragedian. Edmund Kean, and David Garrick. The latter first appeared as "Harlequin" in the "Harlequinade" from which pantomime evolved. Kean was remarked as a notable dancer, also as "Harlequin." Sir Henry Irving saw theatrical service as the "Demon King" in pantomime.

In 1852 actor Benjamin Terry offered his four-year-old daughter, Ellen, to play the "Spirit of the Mustard Pot" in a pantomime. But, when placed in a large jar, Miss Terry screamed and strugPlan for 'Panto'

Dan Leno and Herbert Campbell were amazing pantominists as were the famous Lupino and Conquest families.

One of the prime attractions in all Christmas pantomime is the Principal Boy always played by a girl. Among such alluring Principal Boys have been Fay CompMrs. Rogers, who celebrated her 78th birthday on September 10, nevertheless remembers "Dick Whittington" vividly: the action, the words of songs and even some of the choreography. Also she well remembers that the famous old "limelights" were still in use and very very effective.

"limelights" were still in use and very, very effective.

And, at 78, she will cheerfully demonstrate, too. 1905 is like yesterday to her though Marie Lloyd, who would have been 35 at the time, died in 1922. Tom McNaughton, as "Mother Goose," was the Pantomime has a glittering tale to tell.

The 84 Matthian Little Theatre Society has enlisted a formidable array of skilled ansistants for their version of "Dick Whittington." Sometimes, however, help comes from totally unexpected quarters.

Bill Chaster, the power behind the pantomime, had a phone call from a Mrs. Maud Rogers of 349 Cook Street.

Mrs. Rogers knows quite a bit about the production of "Dick Whittington." After all, she appeared in it when it was played at the Crown Theatre in Peckham Rye. London, with the famous Maire Lloyd as the Principal Boy.

That was in 1905!
Mrs. Rogers, then Miss Smith,

Crown Theatre to prove her participation. The following year, also at the Crown, she was in "Mother

As a chorus girl Mrs. Rogers received the princely salary of £1 a week while the Principal Boy collected £90, Quite a disparity!

However, Mrs. Rogers was undismayed. She was just graduating from Peckham Rye to Leicester Square and from the Crown to the well-known Alhambra when her mother stepped in and said, "No"

What a pity! A career of just two seasons of which she seems to recollect every detail after 58 years!

Somehow I think that, fortified by that absorbing interest, Miss Smith might have gone a long way in the theatre.

And, doubtless, "Dick Whittington" by the St. Matthias Little Theatre this Christmas will stir memorles hitherto quite unsuspected by the players:

Sorting fact from fiction in the story of "Dick Whittington" is not the easiest task in the world. It is interesting but inconclusive.

He certainly existed and he was certainly Lord Mayor of London from June to October of 1397 and from October, 1397, to October, 1398. He enjoyed a third term from 1406 to 1407 and a fourth from 1419 to 1420. He died in March of 1423.

The pantomime is mostly concerned with his adventures before he achieved the rank of London's first magistrate: history deals more fully with his subsequent activities. Even at that the two differ quite materially. History identifies him as the third son of a certain Sir William Whittington of Pauntley in Gloucestershire; the legend has him a poor orphan. History notes that he "clearly entered on his commercial career under favorable circumstances"; not, as legend suggests, as a scultion in the kitchens of Sir Hugh Fitzwarren.

They agree that he married Alice, the daughter of Sir Ivo Fitzwarren, a knight of Dorset, though father-in-law's first name differs according to the source of information. They also agree whole-heartedly on his charitable nature and kindness.

There was a literary gent named John Stow who lived from about 1525 to 1605 and who published in 1598 his "Survey of London and Westminster," a regular goldmine of information on the buildings, social conditions and customs of the metropolis for the six previous centuries.

Mr. Stow had no use at all for fables and legends, pouncing on them and exposing them in the harsh light of careful research rather than the rosy if uncertain light of hearsay,

He does not mention the legend of Richard Whittington at all which indicates that it was probably not established at the time he was conducting his historical researches. However, seven years after the publication of Mr. Stow's "Survey," a play was licensed bearing the title of "The History of Richard Whittington, of his lowe byrth, his great fortune." Just about the entire story is contained in this lengthy title.

The legend was referred to again in a play by Thomas Heywood in 1606 and by Beaumont and Fletcher in 1611.

So much, then, for Dick Whittington who, it has been airly claimed, heard the famous Bow Bells from the George and Vulture Inn on Cornhill. But what about his cet?

The legend here has been traced back to the 13th century at which time Dick wasn't even a prophecy. It appears alike in Persian, Danish and Italian folklore—the first named being singularly appropriate. But where it became mixed in with the Lord Mayor of London nobody knows. An engraver, Robert Elstracke, produced a supposed portrait of Whittington in the second decade of the 17th century and this first showed the subject with his hand resting on ugh! a skull. Later, however. "in deference to the public fancy, a cat was substituted for the skull so that the feline association must, by that time, have become well established and popular.

But who cares anyway? If Dick Whittington and his Cat only provided material for a pantomime that has given pleasure over so many years and to so many people, young and old, their lives were nobly spent and their time needs no further excuse.

LA PAZ, Bolivia, is for the birds. Unless you have wings, the lower down you live, the richer you are!

We found out why, through our first panting night at over 12,000 feet. Oxygen comes first. Next comes warmth. There was falling snow in the morning. Most, if not all, hotels are heatless. If you manage to coax a small electric fire from the management, it only glows faintly and may use up the safety-margin of oxygen.

The inflated money, like the height, is astronomical—twelve thousand "bolivianos" to one dollar. So are prices to the tourist, with four different taxes adding to the cost of meals and accommodation. Yet taxis are incredibly cheap—the equivalent of 15 cents for any trip through the central area—and a La Pas school teacher, comparatively highly paid, must survive on the equivalent of $35 a month.

The city has its interests in the usual tourist pattern—an ancient cathedral, the beautiful and decrepit church of San Francisco; a few colonial buildings; its main avenue, the "Prado", where trees and shrubs have been coaxed to survive (along with a few sturdy palm trees!) in contrast to the arid slopes of the surrounding peaks and altiplano, and the outdoor museum with its replica of the ruins of Tiahuanaco.

But it is the Bolivians, this tough, vigorous, highland people, that are the fascination. With enty 5 per cent "whites" and 70 per cent pure Indian, they are quite a race—179 revolutions or uprisings since liberation from Spain, 33 political parties—which is understandable, since every prideful Bolivian considers he should be president. "Friends" of the people become their 'enemies" with interesting frequency and convenient cliffs lead to their neat disposal. In the Plaza Murillo opposite the Presidential ce, two soldiers guard a monument at stiff attention. It marks the spot where President Villaroel was shot and hanged in 1946. Inscriptions read "Sacrificed by the Oligarchy." "I am not an enemy of the rich, but more the friend of the poor," "The Captain does not abandon his ship in the storm!" The mur-dered president's party, the "Moviemento Naci-onalista Revolutionario," has been in power, after a further uprising, since 1952, a remarkable record of continuity for this country, its regime marked by a social revolution unique in South America. The few great tin mine barons who ruled and exploited have gone. The feudal haciendas are divided among the Indians. Power has been taken from the whites. The real results are still a suspended question.

"This will be a Castro Cuba, without the Russians," a diplomat told us. If so, the example will shake all South America to the core, for good er ill. There are pointers in several directions: The day after our arrival the veterans of Bolivia's bitter Gran Chaco wars with Paraquay of 30 years ago massed before the presidential palace in protest against the Cuban embassy'c communist activities. The government threatened to break diplomatic relations with Cuba. The United States is pouring in money and missions to maintain the status quo. The miners' unions that shot and hanged the old plutocracy are communist-dominated. The newly land-proud campesinos'—no longer called 'Indios'—practice a subsistance economy, grow just enough for their own needs and no more. One result: with the great haciendas gone, Bollvia, the original home of the potato, with 37 varieties in the altiplano, now has to buy them from Chile!

Her mountain people, the vast mass of the population, exude a vigorous, proud nationalism, while scratching a bare living from the vast, bitter uplands. Yet beyond the Cordillera Real lie the immense, potentially rich, almost empty Amazan jungles and pampas, almost unpopulated save for a scattering of gentle "mixed-bloods." The government is making strenuous efforts, aided by U.S. funds, to settle highland people there en masse. But they won't move. For one thing, their bodies are not adapted to the change of height. The Japanese are moving in, and fast.

The Indian markets of La Paz are fascinating, violently colorful. There mix the races from all over the country, each in distinctive garb—Aymaras, the aborigines; Quechuas, speaking the Inca tongue; scatterings of the many small and primitive tribes from the remote tropical lowlands to the east. Witch doctors' stalls display their fetish wares, python and jaguar skins, strange herbs, ghastly embryos of llamas and other creatures. Bad places for this pipe-smoking writer—the "diablada," the devij of their ritual dancers, is portrayed smoking a pipe! Burdened llamas descend the almost vertical, slippery stone setts (they are reputed to commit suicide if their loads exceed a hundred pounds!), conserving their deadly spit against the too-curious tourist, eager to devour with relish any cigaret offered them. Rockets hang incessantly for incessant fiestas—a procession passes through the swarming streets, with an unflattering cartoon of a top-hatted "capitalist," followed by men in caricatures of evening dress, with false, hooked noses, similar "capitalist" hats crowning their heads, hearing, incongruously, a statue of the Virgin Mary. Drums and fifes follow, with left-wing political slogans and after them a swarm of singing Indians. Their look is devout—but to what? We doubt if they could answer.

There is an aura of prideful, violent independence unlike that of the apathetic Indians of Peru and Ecuador—except when they are drunk—yet with it, courtesy. No endless mutter of "gringo" as we have sometimes found. No remarks of "Que lindo!"—how lovely—about the children and then shoving them into the gutter. In fact, no sign of anti-foreign feeling. La Paz is the essence of Bolivia, Bolivians chew "coca" leaves incessantly—the plant grown in the lowlands that makes cocaine, which is smuggled from the country to the eager addicts of other lands in vast quantities, despite a government ban. In their months, they wrap it round their native potatoes, charred to stonelike quality. It is said that because of this they stand their heights, keep The calm is relative. One has a sense that Bolivia, like her volcanos, is boiling up to something. Sufferage is universal and controlled-her illiterates vote with colored bits of paper and the government has its network of secret police, "Gringo" opinion here agrees her president, Senor Victor Paz Estensoro, who as vice-president escaped hanging by a hairbreadth in 1946, is an intelligent and dedicated man, trying to lead his country to a better future along the hairline between reaction and the not-so subtle communist coils. His means sometimes appear dubious, but he may succeed.

Of one thing we are already sure. This landlocked, largely unknown country, hemmed by fortress mountains, and impenetrable jungles, is one to watch, so far as the future of South America and perhaps the world, is concerned.

Tomorrow we head down into the "Yungas."

Elopements Stirred Old Victoria . . . Especially When

This, says the author, was the "luscious retreat."

Whatever has happened to the elopement? Do péople elope any more? If not, why not?

The elopement seems to be outdated, and much of the excitement has gone from life, not only for the elopers, but for the observers as well. There is, apparently, nothing quite like an elopement, especially if the duo is rich and famous, to whet public appetite and set tongues to wagging.

Victoria in the 1860's was being constantly rocked by elopments, which occurred in all strata of society. Perhaps young men were more romantic and more daring then than they are today. Their blood stirred as they waited under their ladies' windows, and arm and arm in bliss, breathless, rushed off into the night.

It seems to have been the parents of the lady who mostly objected to her marriage. Today, so I'm told by those who should know, that mammas are so anxious to have their daughters wed that they almost push them to the altar, and sometimes, I'm also told, the young man would just as soon not be taking that march so suss. However, these things I do not know for certain. I only know that if there was no elopement for as long as two months in the Victoria of long ago everyone

In The Victoria Press, in April of 1865 I find an account of one of those romantic elope ments which gave this place such excitement, It must have been the talk of the town for days, and I suppose parents of beautiful young daughters practically kept them under lock and key, what with all those handsome, wild young men about the town, having come here from goodness knows where probably, no doubt, from that wicked city of San Francisco, where the morals were said to be very loose

Perhaps we can recapture some of the thrill if today, nearly 100 years later, we read exactly what the paper said:

"AN ELOPEMENT - Romance is a rare commodity in Victoria and anything approach ing an elopement consequently becomes in-tensely refreshing. Idlers and town gossips were busy last evening with the names of Mr n, a gay, young Lothario, probably just out of his minority, and well-known from his former connection with the 'all 'ot' business (whatever that was)," and a certain buxom damuel of not more than 16 summers, whose bright eves used to emit electric sparks from behind the bar of a hotel at the south end of Government Street.

"According to the accepted version of the story the flight took place from the hotel in question after nightfall, everything, of course, having been preconcerted by the young cava-lier and a fast friend with whom he had been seen careering through the streets during the day; the maiden went out about dusk a shopping, and the faithful swain, being at hand with special licence in his pocket, the loving pair went before the parson and speedily were made one. Then they quietly proceeded to a certain luscious retreat not 100 miles from Beacon Hill Park, where quarters had been secured and where the honeymoon will be spent, provided the 'stern parent' does not interfere.

"That individual, meanwhile, was left to the care of the 'fast friend' who undertook to put him off the scent, which he did by informing him sympathizingly of the elopement and then sending him off about dark to Saanich in quest of the runaways, where, of course, he won't find them.

(That "certain luscious retreat not 100 miles from Beacon Hill Park" was, it seems to me, the Park Hotel on the edge of the park the corner of Douglas and Simcoe today. Bill Lush, a character if ever there was one, was mine host at the Park hence the play, on words the "luscious" retreat.)

It's Official

Next day the town learned who the elopers were, in these prim and very formal words: "Married on the 10th April, at the Wesleyan Parsonage, by the Rev. E. Evans, D.D., Mr. Thomas Harrison to Miss Anne Vaux, both of Victoria, V.I."

The Victoria Chronicle noted this elope ent, but in a less sensational way: "ELOPE-MENT-Yesterday a young woman was missed from the residence of her relatives and after an anxious day spent in enquiry it was ascertained that she had been united by a clergyman to the man of her choice and gone to Saanich to spend the honeymoon. The affair has created much comment in the social cirwherein the lovens revolved, the friends of the bride being opposed to the match. The bride is very pretty and the bridegroom is possessed

EDWARD MIDDLETON, post office, Vic-

I know not who Edward Middleton was and I cannot find out, search as I may, but Victorians likely looked upon him as brassy in-deed. Such advertisements are common enough today, though no man or woman so adverwould dare use his or her name in public, but in the 1860s Victorians had never heard of such goings-on, and eyebrows were

The Colonist, however, thought it a good "MATRIMONIAL In answer to several enquiries we beg to state that the advertis ment for a helpmate which appears in this paper, is a perfectly genuine notice and inserted, we have every reason to believe, in honest good faith.

"Although this is the first notice of the kind that has yet been published in the colony it is generally conceded that single men have fewer opportunities of contracting suitable matrimonial alliances here than in most other countries, and it should, therefore, occasion no surprise that a respectable bachelor of 33 years of age, possessing the means and the desire to maintain a wife, and not being personally acquainted with a lady suited to his with whom he could tie the Knot, should adopt this mode of seeking partner willing to link her fortunes with his wn, and thus save himself the necessity of leaving his business to take care of itself while he proceeds to England, or elsewhere, to accommodate the object in view. Eligible ladi may apply without compuction. They are no more bound to accept than the applicant."

Whether any of the ladies were bold enough to get in touch with Edward Middleno one knows today. And whether Edward Middleton ever married I cannot now learn. Another of the frustrations of our his-

Lucky Escape

I enjoyed very much reading this account of one facet of Victoria social life in the 1860s; "ESCAPE EXTRAORDINARY Last evening . . a citizen was sauntering past a house in town, when, hearing a rush, he turned round and beheld a man running frantically towards him. He had scarcely time to put himself on his guard, thinking it an attack, when som thing whizzed past his ears, which, by the fall, he conjectured to be a glass tumbler, and which had been thrown by one of the fair sex, evidently at the person who had rushed from the house.

Now, whatever was all that about? Did the lady eject the man from her house? so fresh that she heaved a glass at him, hoping to harm him? Or did he take his departure against her will, and she wished to bring him back, with a cut head, which she could tenderly bathe? The possibilities here are enormous.

Page 12-The Daily Colonist, Sunday, October 27, 1988

The evening the lady was throwing a tumbler at a freeing male, there was a crowd at the corner of Douglas and Yates, having a fine time watching the medicine man: "A PUBLIC HENEFACTOR—Considerable amusement was created... by the loquacious efforts of a travelling dentist, corn extractor and wart destroyer. Several of the individuals forming the assemblage which aurrounded the 'doctor,' upon evincing signs in their merriment of unctean masticators, were seized upon with quite a professional bresqueness and sent away with shirting ivories, to the envy of those who had not the moral courage to undergo the operation in public."

Everyone had a fine time, every night, watching teeth pulled and corns and warts handled, until: "A DENTIST IN DIFFICUL-TIES—The renowned 'Dr.' Heeler, who has for a week or two past been extracting the teeth and corns of many of our citizens has been arrested for being 'corned' himself, and at the same time disorderly."

However, there were always love affairs, made public, to keep people entertained. There was, for instance, this: "A LOVE AFFAIR—William Burns, a Kanaka, employed as groom at Dr. James' stables, was arrested...charged with abducting a young countrywoman from the control of her guardian. A private examination was held in the magistrate's office, which the lady, her guardian and Burns attended and after a short conference Burns agreed to marry the girl, provided he was liberated. Some citizens went to his security and he departed with his intended clinging to his arm, looking as happy and contented as it is possible for a man to look who has had his head placed in the matrimonial noose without his consent."

And there was, also, this affair d'amour: "MODERN ROMANCE—A young man abducted a young female, daughter of a Kanaka.

The father laid information and the young man was arrested and taken to prison, whither the girl accompanied him. Her friends endeavored to have her return home, but she declined, as she preferred any hardship along with her 'lovyer' to a luxurious home without him."

Also, I cannot learn the end of that story. That "modern romance" fades right out of the newspapers. Were they married in Jail? We'll Governor James Douglas was a busy man in the spring of 1861, when he received a great shock. He was having trouble with the natives, who had come to Victoria and were attempting to push the police around. He had his head full of affairs and cares of state, too busy, no doubt, to see signs of what was going on in his very own household.

Douglas' Daughter

The Columbia tells of British Columbia's most sensational elopement of all:

"Yesterday a report was circulated that the daughter of a distinguished official had eloped with a clerk in one of the public offices and upon making enquiry at the proper quarters we found the report to be true.

"It seems that the cierk left the harhor on Wednesday afternoon in the schooner Explorer, ostensibly for a pleasure trip on the sound; but after reaching Beacon Hill Park the vessel hid off and on until dark, when he came ashore in a small boat, and proceeding to the residence of his betrothed's father, watched an opportunity after the family had retired to rest to meet and escort the young lady to the schooner, and then up sail for the American side.

"Some hours later the yacht Wanderer, with a limb of the law on board, started after the fugitives, to induce the young lady to return, if possible, Last evening the yacht Petrel arrived from Port Townsend and reports having seen the Explorer off Dungenness lighthouse with all sail set, headed for Port Townsend,

"The Wanderer was in night of the Explorer at the time and both were scudding along at a rapid rate before a smart breeze.

"As the Wanderer is a fast boat it is believed that she succeeded in overhauling the fugitives this side of Port Townsend, but we shall be very much mistaken if the knot is not tied by an American justice of the peace long before this item reaches the eyes of our

Two days later appeared this marriage notice: "On Saturday, 31st August, at Christ Church, by the Rev. Mr. Cridge, Charles Good, second son of the Rev. Grim-faced James Douglas, having seen his 17-year-old daughter properly married before his eyes, wont sternly about his duties as chief of state:

"THE GOVERNOR AND THE INDIANS—The governor sent for the chiefs of the various tribes who had been so troublesome on Sunday last, assaulting the police in the discharge of their duties, etc., in order to talk to them about their unruly behavior. Officer Blake was dispatched to their camp to bring them over to the government buildings. About 30 Indians dressed themselves in their best contumes and went in state to have a 'hy-you wa-wa with Mr. Douglas.'

"His Excellency received them on the steps of the Government House and spoke at some length, telling them he would send the most unruly back to their own country, and he rebuked them severely, and sincerely, for their conduct

"Having spoken to them for about 20, minutes, His Excellency treated each one to a large loaf of bread and some molasses, and sent them home more distressed (through over-repletion) in body than in mind."

DALLY'S PICTURES TELL THE STORY

with the $5 piece. Dally, tickled to death, paid him well for his honesty and workmanship. But, also, that night came tragedy.

A young Songhess buck had noticed the old man working on the links, and deciding to possess them along with the $5 coin, slipped into the old fellow's Rock Bay cabin and stabbed him to death while he slept.

It was two years later, in mid-September 1868 (sixth anniversary of Daily's arrival in the colony) that our Fort Street photographer had a ringside seat at the Barkerville fire. He had been up the adjoining hillside the night before admiring the northern lights, and at the same time not unmindful of the lights, music and revelry from the saloons and dance halls below him, and the quantities of sparks that erupted from the chimneys. He asked someone the next morning if there wasn't risk of fire but was told that so many sparks had landed on wood and never taken had it was figured the lumber had a fireproof quality. That very afternoon the town disappeared in a holacaust of flame!

Cause of the conflagration differed nightly from the Chicago story of Mrs. O'Leary's cow; this time it was a miner forcing his attentions on a dance hall girl in a wood and canvas addition back of Barry & Adler's mison. She was trying to iron a dress and fend him set at the same time and in the course of her exertions the stove pipe came advift, and a lick of flame caught the canvas ceiling.

The fire spread rapidly from the centre of town, as storekeepers, bartenders and miners dashed around trying to save their effects, sometimes stacking them in places later overrun by the fire.

In this hectic situation you couldn't exactly blame Dally for not putting up his dark tent and sensitizing a negative; particularly as it would be at least 30 years before a camera could even take a picture of a man walking!

However, he was right on deck the following day to record the rueful survivors standing around the scene of waste and desolation. Which reminds me that few realize, studying those pictures, that the people depicted had to sit or stand around in one position for anything up to six or eight minutes. Or that the photographer had to use a dark tent at the scene, in the gloom of which he virtually made the negative: done by flowing a collodion mixture over a glass plate, later dunked in a solution of silver nitrate. After that it stood on edge to drain for a spell, then was put in a plate holder and, if the subject was still around, you slipped it in the camera.

The picture taken, back went the plate to the tent for development, or partial development, and when you got it back home you varnished it.

Prints were made in the home darkroom, on paper you made yourself, usually fine note-paper, washed in solutions and dried in the dark. How they got away with alt this is always a profound mystery to the present day photographer. Anyway, it was the "wet plate" process in vogue up to around 1880. Of course a lot more gear was involved, like buckets and tubs, bottles and trays, a bed of cotton batting in a tin tub to save jars and vials from breaking, and of course a rack to hold the glass plates from rattling against each other. Last but not least, a barrel of water, which, in turn, meant a horse and wagon to hauf it all around.

Dally's camera, for those interested, probably weighed about 30 pounds, had no bellows. and was just a big black box in two sections, one sliding inside the other. The front end had the lens, the rear part held the ground glass for focusing. To focus you just pulled the rear of the camera backward.

It had no diaphragm to open or close, no shutter to click; instead you just capped the lens with a round cardboard box lined with velvet. Take off the cap, count the minutes on your watch, replace the cap. Sometimes Dally erected his tent on his wagon, hopping up on the tailboard to enter; other times he used the ground, first making sure that he had a spot four feet square, that and level and free of rocks. They're often hard to kneel on.

If this sounds inconvenient, just add to it summer heat, dust and windstorms, flies and —boy, oh boy—morquitos! Once, for change of pace, Dally was attacked by engles while focusing his camera on the biaffs of Pavilion

In addition, in the close confinement of these little tents you were on breathing terms with some pretty wild mixtures, for the early day lemman played around a lot with nitric and ascetic acid, as well as alcohol, ether and guncotton.

However, if his brand of endeavor seems to smack of blood, sweat and tears, still he managed to turn in some remarkable examples of the photographic art; and to men like Fred Dally, the husband and wife team of Maynard, the latter-day Frank brothers, and Chapman (perhaps the dean of them all) we owe a tremendous debt of gratitude. It's due to their painstaking work that libraries, archives and museums throughout the northwest can give us the true picture of what it all looked like "away back when . . ."

SAROYAN NO LONGER STIRS HOT ANGER

REVIEWED BY JOHN ROBSON

Some authors belong to a special period of one's life. I first found Saroyan when I was 16, in his collection of short stories, The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze.

These stories were just right for me then, with their sorrowful anger against the world in general, and especially against the monstrous injustice of the death of beautiful things, Sarovan has always thought that man himself is the most important of these beautiful things, and he has now reached the point, in his fifties, of dwelling on his own death.

No rage can be too great against this greatest injustice of all, but Saroyan now writes in a more muted way.

Not Dying is the almost guiet account of a few months in his life when he tried-by writing-to fight off a warning of death. The most unusual feature of the book is that it is a book about writing the book, as though, to use one of his own rambling accounts, he were spinning out his moments before execution by telling his audience all the extenuating circumstances, while at the same time saying his last words.

The difficulty is that the extenuating circumstances turn out to be just circumstances, just moments of sadness, simple joy, and blurred beauty. And the death does not seem imminent, for it is a spiritual death, the same one that Saroyan has always been statement of experience which cannot communicate its importance to the reader unless the reader is already swinging with the author. Otherwise the trapeze just goes by, and after we've grown up it doesn't look very exciting.

Sometimes, in fact, it looks very dull. For example, during an account of a visit to the racetrack with his son, Saroyan tries to explain his habit of simply listing horses and results by saying in parenthesis: "You like horses, I hope. You like horse races, I hope. You like to read about bets made on them, I hope." Well, maybe I do, but I don't think even a dedicated punter wants to read the results of races run in and around Paris in 1959.

Sometimes it is relaxing, however, as in the recounting of the anecdote about Willie Sutton, the failed bank robber, who was asked why he robbed banks, and replied: "That's where the money is."

But for the most part, it is simply nostalgic and sad. I can't recapture the confused excitement and rage I felt when I was 16, and neither can Saroyan, even when he is accompanied, as he is

Flashback Scandal

REVIEWED BY JOHN F. BASSETT

Eliot Asinof has hit a home run with this portrayal of baseball's greatest shame—the fixed World Series of 1919.

Carefully researched and clearly written, Eight Men Out presents the first complete story of the Chicago Black Sox scandal, in its chronology, its personalities and its effect on the game.

A former haliplayer, Asinof is perhaps a little quick to shift re-appropriately for the fix from the players to the gamblers and blame whole scandal on the pitiable minries doled out by then Chicago owner Charles Comiskey

They reflected a loose, engaging era of good times, fast mor emancipated women and exciting baseball.

The game, in fact, had been outgrowing its restrictions for some ten years and the "buying off" of a player was more than an occa-

Asinof touches all these bases in his narrative: The gamblers, the players, the backroom boys, the lawyers, the trials and the aftermath. And the sports-minded reader's interest will not flag.

If, after recovering from the shock which the title may give you, you can browse through this work, you will find it both interesting and entertaining. It was written by Commander R. C. Mayne, Royal Navy. You will find his name on our charts today, perpetuated in Mayne Island, one of the Gulf Islands. He first saw these waters in 1849, as a midshipman in HMS Inconstant. In 1857, as a lieutenant, he was appointed to HMS Plumper, commissioning for the Pacific.

In the Plumper Mayne spent

the years from 1857 to 1861 in British Columbia waters. He was an observant man and he turned out to be a writer with a witty pen. Time proved him wrong in some of his prognostications, but time has changed many things. As a navaj officer, he looked upon Eaquimalt as his home port while on this station and he looked upon its harbor with great favor, to the detriment of Victoria harbor. His comparison of the two harbors will astound no one who is familinr with them. But his complete condemnation of Victoria harbor has not been borne out completely. In the days of sail it was a tricky harbor to negotiate. It still is, Mayne would probably be dumbfounded if he could stand on the Causeway and watch the Princess Marguerite or the Coho nuzzling up to wharves.

Mayne reports that in 1860 the Princess Royal, a sailing ship of some 600 tons belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, grounded in the entrance while under tow of a steam tug. The Empress of Canada of some 22,000-odd tons never had this misfortune! Models of both these ships are on display at the Meritime Museum of British Columbia. That of the Princess Royal is a waterline model showing the ship bowling along under full sail. The model of the Empress of Canada is a full model, beautifully detailed. They were both built by amateur model builders, but are so well executed that they fall into the category of museum display pieces. It is difficult to believe, comparing the two models, that such amazing changes in ship design could take place within the space of about 75 years. Members of the Maritime Museum Society, to whom the library of the museum is available, will find Mayne's interesting work on the shelves should they wish to peruse it.

History in Marine Art

For centuries marine art was a very neglected field. There were no specialists. Those who undertook the task of giving us a visual record of the battles of the Spanish invasion attempt of 1588, for example, made a pretty fair hash of the truth and of the technicalities.

The Dutch were the first to recognize that apecial talents and training were required of artists apecializing in ships and the sea. When samples of Dutch marife paintings reached England, it took very little time for the British to see that they had no home-grown talent and Dutch artists were enticed across the Channel. Examples of the works of these experts cannot, unfortunately, be found in Victoria in their original form. Reproductions, yes. Such a reproduction of a painting of the Resolution of 1660 by Van de Velde the Younger, graces a wall of the Medal Room in the Maritime Museum of British Columbia at Ennuirement.

The various media used in the portrayal of marine art have varied widely over the years. Perand-inks, oils, water-colors, pencil and the engraver's steel have all found favor. Now, of course, the photographer competes with the artist. The ability of the camera to record the fleeting moment is of great assistance in capturing a particular event. However, it cannot always convey the impression which a painting or a drawing can

Many of the early pictorial records of the coast were the work of officers serving in ships of the Royal Navy stationed here. The use of water-colors was, at one time, an art much practised by well-educated Englishmen. Presumably the traveller to distant parts recorded his impressions in this way much as we today would click the shutter on a camera. The museum displays many examples of these works, as well as many of the efforts of more professional artists. It is unfortunate that space in the museum does not permit more of its holdings to be on view.

A question which may be asked by visitors to this museum might well be, "When does a museum cease to be a museum and become a picture gallery?" If a definite answer can be given to such a question the museum staff would like to hear it. It would seem that as long as a picture, in any medium, assists in telling the story which the museum is trying to tell, then it has a right to be shown. But no museum can tell a proper story solely by the use of pictures. As far as the Maritime Museum of British Columbia is concerned, the real answer cannot be found until more space is available. When that happy day arrives, it will no doubt be possible to arrange rooms devoted to the history of this area as seen through the eyes of artists and photographers. Until that day the museum hopes to display its pic-torial collection in the best manner possible.-"FIDELITER."

David Brown vanished without a trace 50 years ago.

His father, who died at a very advanced age only a few years ago, had never given up hope that some day a message would come out of the north explaining the strange disappearance.

Members of the family still hope somewhere a clue will be

Writing to The Islander, a cousin, Ella M. Davis, 1054 Princess Street, Victoria, has this to say:

"David was born and reared on his father's farm in the township of Inneskillen, situated in the southeast corner of Ontario's Lambton County. The father had intended that David should become proprietor of the familyhad been small children at the time of his departure believe it owned timber mill which was situated on the home acres, but David chose to study for the ministry and eventually became ordained in the Presbyterian Church of of Canada,

"Following ordination he immediately volunteered for missionary service and was posted to what, at that time, was called the wilds' of British Columbia.

"Persons who had definite knowledge concerning the time and place of David's labors are no longer living, but relatives who was "somewhere in the Kootenay," where he served a wide area.

"His final letter home told of expected departure for another field, more remote, to be reached by a pack journey through rugged country. He also advised that reply be postponed until they heard from him upon arrival at his new location. But no one ever heard from David Brown again.

"Official inquiry disclosed that he never arrived at his destination. Upcountry traits were hazardous, to say the least, during the early years of the century, but nothing was discovered to indicate missalventure on the journey and there was nothing in his character and no circumstance to suggest voluntary disappearance.

"Perhaps this mystery of a half century could be, in a measure, solved: It is still possible that someone exists who saw or even heard something that could shed light upon the fate of David

Victorians Still Remember

Sophia Disaster

"Just time to say goodbye. We are foundering."

The pathetic farewell of 343 persons was flashed through the night of Oct. 24, 1918. Then silence.

Anxiously the rescue boats bucking gale-swept Lynn Canal listened for more. But the Princess Sophia was never heard from again.

With morning came calm, but only a mast tip marked the 2,320-ton liner's grave by Vanderbilt Reef. There was not one survivor.

Thursday marked the forty-fifth anniversary of the disaster, the worst in B.C.'s marine history. It will long scar the memories of Victorians, for many of those lost were residents.

Winter struck the west coast early and hard in 1918. Driven off course during a blinding snow-storm, the Sophia grounded onto Vanderbilt Reef early on the morning of Oct. 24, and stuck fast. Her master, Capt. F. L. Locke, a veteran of 27 years' service with Canadian Pacific, immediately radioed particulars to the B.C. Coast Service.

Capt. Locke did not think his ship was in danger. Both he and senior officials of the company believed the Sophia would float off the reef on the next high tide, expected that afternoon. The salvage steamer Tees, just returned from reacuing the CPR steamer Princess Adelaide from reefs at Georgina Point, prepared for immediate departure from Vichoria.

Aboard the Sophia was one of the largest lists of passengers handled that year. Most were from the interior of Alaska, having reached Whitehorse on the last ships before river navigation closed for the winter. They were southingful to "civilization" to enjoy the season in a more pleasant climate. Confident the Sophia would float off, they whiled away the time calmly.

Both Victoria newspapers gave the story prominent and thorough coverage, providing latest details to a news-hungry city all too familiar with marine disasters. Victorians followed the articles of a vicited.

themselves . . . and waited.

CPR news releases were encouraging. "The waters of Lynn Canal are well protected and no less of life is feared . . . "

When Sophia failed to float off on Thursday's afternoon tide, officials said that the ship was in no immediate danger, that Tees would leave for the scene, that Princess Alice had sailed north to perform a transfer of the passengers, and that, "If the weather holds fair, there should be no difficulty in getting the Sophia afficial on the tides which occur early text month."

Press stories carried the first hint of tragedy when they reported that a "fresh northerly breeze" was blowing down the canal, making it impossible to effect a transfer of passengers to any of the vessels standing by.

These vessels were the U.S. ships Cedar and Peterson, the auxiliary schooner King & Wing, and many smaller craft, mostly fishing vessels.

CPR officials remained optimistic, although they were concerned about the disrupted passenger services, and juggled achedules and steamers in an attempt to keep all routes operating. However, they did admit publicly that they were having increasing difficulty making contact with the Sophia, but reassured Victorians that all would work out well. They said that if the situation deteriorated, the many boots at the scene would take care of all those numbed. A brief wireless message had been relayed to Victoria from Juneau, stating that sometime during the night the ship that had made its home port here since arriving from a Scotland shipyard six years before, had sunk.

In some quarters the news was received with disbelief. Capt, J. W. Troup, manager of the B.C. Coast Steamship Service, said, "It is hardly conceivable. I cannot believe it." He tried desperately to get official confirmation or denial from Alaska. Because the telegraphic cable to Skagway was out of commission, the only means of communication was by wireless, never too good at best of times.

Upon hearing the report, many Victorians held the hope that those aboard had been picked up by the many rescue craft standing by.

T. W. PATERSON

Except for the initial wireless report that Sophia was lost, Victorians knew nothing. They impatiently waited for Princess Alice to arrive. With her powerful transmitter, she would be able to report the situation. Finally, Capt.

Troup was able to learn meagre details:

When the lighthouse tender Cedar received Sophia's message that she was sinking, about 5 o'clock Thursday, she had radioed back, "We are coming. Save your juice so you can guide us." But in the stormy blackness, the little vessel was forced to put back and anchor until daylight, At 8:30 the following morning, she radioed Alaska that only the Sophia's foremast was above water.

When the storm abated, rescuers were able to walk, at low tide, over Vanderbilt Reef where Sophia had perched. The rock where the hull had rested was worn smooth as "a silver dollar" by the grinding action of the ship.

Apparently heavy gusts quartering on her stern, which was not held by the reef, swung her around, the bow acting as an axis. When the bow was blown free, she filled by the head and sank.

In the five days before Sophia's last sailing.

over 800 persons had reached Whitehorse and Skagway en route to the "outside." They were disappointed to find that practically no shipping accommodation was available. However, more than 300 were able to board the steamer Prince Rupert, which made a special trip north.

As Prince Rupert slipped from her Skagway dock, the crowd aboard cheered their good fortune. But those standing on the pier, faced with spending the winter there, did not answer, and watched the departure in silence.

Ironically, they cheered when notified that Princess Sophia would make another trip. Two hundred and fifty-eight persons boarded her.

The heartbreaking task of collecting the bodies began under the personal supervision of Alaska's Governor Riggs. Over 25 boats participated in the search. The shores lining Lynn Canal were littered with victims. Many bodies of women and children were found on life-rafts, indicating that an attempt had been made to save them first. They died of exhaustion and exposure.

It was learned that passengers had refused the opportunity to be taken off before the storm, preferring the warmth and comfort of the ship to the cold and barren shores. In this, the barometer had performed a cruej deception, It had been rising, indicating that the weather was to improve.

Of Princess Sophia's crew, many had made their homes here. One escaped. Chief Engineer A. Alexander had been on vacation.

One of the more tragic incidents of the wreck concerned 17-year-old Norman Blyth. He had been hastening south to the Shoal Bay bedside of his mother who was dangerously ill. He had made repeated attempts to secure transportation home, but had been unsuccessful due to the heavy bookings. Aware that his mother might not recover, he made a last desperate effort and managed to get a berth as a steward aboard the Sophia.

Victoria joined Skagway, Juneau and Whitehorse in mourning. Then, still numbed by the blow, she received another severe shock, Exactly one week later headlines cried the sinking of the fisheries patrol vessel Galiano, which had foundered in heavy seas off the Queen Charlotte Islands. With 26 persons aboard, almost all from Victoria, she vanished.

On the night of November 11, 1918, Armistice Day, Princess Alice returned to Vancouver, the bodies of 157 victims of the Sophia on her
